

The WASHINGTON SUNDAY HERALD

IS THE BEST IN THE CAPITAL
for READER and ADVERTISER

These Things Make It So: Liveliest News, Best Served; Aptest Editorials, Crisply Done; Timely Cartoons, Finely Drawn; Society's Most Intimate Interest; Finance's Most Accurate Records; Woman's Most Helpful Page; Sports' Briskest Handling; Closest Views of the Stage; Fiction of Magazine Standards; Character Sketches of To-day's Big Men; Understandable Essays on Religion, Politics, Science, Art, All Illumined with Fine Illustrations; the World's Best Comic Section.

The News is new news, rightly told—truly, accurately, interestingly, without prejudice. The city and its people and government; the Capital and the great departments which make up the Federal Government, are set forth fully, bravely, in The Sunday Herald. For the special departments of news there are special writers:

I. A. FLEMING makes for The Sunday Herald a financial page that is without an equal in the Capital.

H. ROBERT MANZ, The Herald's cartoonist, knows Washington and its people, and gives them the cartoons that tell most about the things that most interest them.

The world of sports is covered by WILLIAM PEET and his corps of competent assistants in a way that keeps Washington people up with the very latest in athletics here and throughout the rest of the country.

JULIA CHANDLER MANZ makes two departments scintillate: The affairs of most concern to women, and the affairs of the playerfolk to whom all the world looks for its amusement and instruction. Bright, human, sympathetic articles she writes on those two great subjects, for both of which she had special training.

NATALIE SUMNER LINCOLN conducts a section of The Washington Herald that holds the latest news and the best pictures of the people most talked about in Washington society, the most interesting in the country.

MARGARET WADE describes the clothes women wear—tells what the leaders of society regard as smart and what they call taboo.

Among the big exclusive features that The Washington Sunday Herald presents its readers are stories and essays by men who command their own prices from the best magazines. You are used to paying large moneys for the stories that Wallace Irwin and George Randolph Chester and Ellis Parker Butler and John Kendrick Bangs write. But when you pay five cents for The Washington Herald you get pages of their best, together with all the other good things in the same edition, including a page by the celebrated humorist, M. Quad, contributions by George V. Hobart in the series, SEEING LIFE WITH JOHN HENRY, the famous JUDITH LEE DETECTIVE STORIES, pages of Paris fashions and home dressmaking, and the most remarkable feature offered through newspapers this year, TWENTY THOUSAND MILES IN THE PATH OF NAPOLEON. Add to these illustrations by men like James Montgomery Flagg, and the best-comic supplement in the world, and you have a wonderful newspaper, brilliant, complete, satisfying, inspiring.

The Washington Sunday Herald

is the "People's Newspaper."

It keeps the best watch on the people's business and is best qualified to tell the people about the people's business. Readers know this, advertisers know this. Be an advertiser, if you need publicity. Be a reader, if you need news, entertainment, instruction.
